	Hosts Cliff and Nedda Horvath introduce an interview with Deputy Willie Douglas and Detective William Cloud from the Community Involvement Department of the Broward County Sheriff's Department. Detective Cloud discusses alternatives to putting juveniles in custody for committing crimes. He says broken homes often produce youth who are prone to get involved in crime. Douglas and Cloud say some contributing factors to a criminal mentality include lack of communication in the family, the legal system, and school pressures. Douglas adds there are no strict "types" for kids who throw rocks into the windshields of by-passing cars on the Inter-state, but that many seek attention through crime.

In these two programs, Bob Hoskins talks with a panel including Parents of Murdered Children, Attorney David Waksman, and Pastor/Dr. Wayne Leaver. Jeff and Annette Blumfeld, parents of a murdered son, also sit on the panel. Bob notes that none of the panelists are happy with the legal system. They are twice victimized, first by the crime and second by the system. Jeff and Annette express anger that their child's murderer served only half of his sentence. Attorney Waksman says many early releases of convicts are due to "gain time" and "incentive time", a contributory factor being the over-crowded conditions of prisons. Grief Counselor Edie Stark, also a panelist, helps parents deal with the emotional devastation and the grief process, with the frustration and anger of what Waksman termed as an "illogical and complex system" which emphasizes protecting the criminal.

Kurt Hardy, Deputy Sheriff for Los Angeles County for 22 years, tells Jim McClellan of the work he and his wife do in prisons, in the three sections--low, medium, and high security-- in an effort to help the inmates not continue their life of crime. He felt God's calling to help free those behind bars and prevent their going out and committing the same crimes over again. He says that if the felon has no hope when he gets out, no where to go, no one who cares, and no way to start life anew, that he will revert to his habits of crime.

DRUGS/ALCOHOL (cont'd)	Joy 1030-87 John Q. Baucom, author of Fatal Choice and Say No To Drugs discusses drug and alcohol abuse with Jim McClellan. He gives alarming statistics of the deaths of teenagers due to suicide. Baucom says that some people are pre-disposed to drug abuse and suicide because of the family problems they are exposed to as they grow up. He feels parental influence is very strong, and if parents use any kind of drugs regularly, even over-the-counter, their children are more likely to turn to opiates and other drugs or alcohol. Depression and drug abuse by mothers are prime predictors of suicide and drug abuse in their children. He mentions that 93% of teens are experimenting with drugs before high school. 	Josh McDowell and Richard Hogue open the program. Richard introduces a roll-in of McDowell's address on a college campus concerning sexual mores today. He says youth are crying out for intimacy and being told by peers, education, and the media that sexual contact is the way to get it. He gives statistics of the incredible number of illicit sex acts shown on TV without adverse consequences such as sexually transmitted diseases, deformed babies, marital strife, and abortion. He urges parents not to tolerate such brainwashing and and teach their youth true values.

	Josh and Richard Hogue introduce the subject, "can youth stay pure before marriage?" In a roll-in featuring McDowell's address on a college campus, he gives the secular viewpoint about pre-marital sex, then proper birth control materials which they should have to practice safe sex. He says youth haven't changed, but society has and condones premarital and casual sex. Schools teach no morals, implying that it is acceptable. He mentions several reasons why one should abstain from sex and urges parents to take the initiative in equipping their kids to cope with the deplorable sexual mores of our day.

	Josh and Richard Hogue introduce the theme: positive reasons parents can give their kids to wait about sex until marriage. In a roll-in of Josh at a college campus, he points out that the most important sex organ is the mind. Past sexual relationships are carried by the mind into the marriage into life. It can be a deterrent to a happy marriage. He warns against reading pornographic material which poisons the mind and lowers standards. Every mate deserves a disease free mate. He introduces a roll-in of Surgeon general Koop on AIDS which says having sex with a person may mean you're having sex with many other partners shared previously.			10-17-87 5:00 p.m.	27:45

	John and Ruth Anne Jacobs host the youth program. They interview Berry Handley, wrestler and former member of Jacob's Power Team of young men with unusual strength, and Jack Collett, Youth pastor of Church of the Open Door in Spokane, Wash. They discuss ways to help teens cope with pressures and problems. Having worked in a mortuary and seen suicide victims, Jack now has a ministry to reach potential suicide victims. John says 95 of 100 teens say the world doesn't need them. Over two million have committed suicide this year.			10-26-87 5:00 p.m.	1:59:48

	Jim McClellan introduces Phil Phillips, author of Turmoil in the Toybox and Halloween and Satanism. Phillips contends that toys and cartoons teach kids society's values, values promulgated often not by society but by a few programmers. He points out that many such toys and cartoons are teaching them to accept the occult. Gives examples. Warns against innocent (supposedly) Tarot cards and other games that lead kids to accept the occult.

	Jim McClellan interviews Al Menconi, author of Christian Music. Al points out that young people tend to establish their identity with music groups and largely look to the entertainment world for their leaders. He warns that the punk and heavy metal groups' songs have suicidal tendencies woven in, as well as violent reactions to parents. He gives a few questions young people and their parents should ask in evaluating songs.

	Jerry and Sandy Barnard discuss with Dave Roeveer and Mickey Block problems of high school teenagers and ways they are using to help them. Both Viet Nam veterans, having suffered multiple wounds, Dave, youth evangelist, and Mickey, psychologist, have combined their ministries and have been provided with open doors to high school campuses. Teaching sexual, and drug/alcohol abstinence, they are pointing teenagers to higher goals and hope. Both stress the need for love and understanding and deplore the lack of moral teaching and restraint in high schools and the blatant sex programs on television.
